COIL Course Idea: At Howard Community College, we are building a robust COIL program under a federal grant project titled Transborder Dialogues. The project explores a wide range of globalization topics within Humanities and Social Sciences courses, such as Literature, World Languages, Anthropology, History, Art History, and Geography. We have 6 COIL projects launching this fall and will have a new cohort of 6 faculty by October who will work with partners in spring 2022 (February to June) and launch their COIL projects in our fall 2022 semester (September to December). We welcome cross discipline collaboration and COIL project topics are flexible and chosen by faculty partners.

We also hope to begin expanding COIL in areas such as Business, Health Sciences, and STEM over the coming year.

Name: Vivian Price
Email: vprice@csudh.edu
Institution: California State University Dominguez Hills
Country: United States
Language Preference for COIL Collaboration: English
Academic Discipline: Interdisciplinary Studies, Labor Studies

COIL Course Idea: I teach a variety of social science courses, including Documenting Resistance this Fall 2021. In that course, students create visual essays describing ways that they or others whom they interview, stand up for what they believe in. I work with academic professors in design and partner with them on themes of resistance. We would love to do a module this fall with a colleague in visual arts or social sciences who uses creativity to express political thought. We could build a session in which our students talk about the projects they are working on in our respective courses.

In the Spring of 2022, I will teach a course on international film and social activism. Storytelling is a powerful way of narrating personal and collective experiences that reflect an awareness of oppression and sometimes organizing for change. I would like to find an international partner to do a module in which students from both of our countries exchange ideas about a film that we decide would generate dialogue.
